

The Hollowbodies

The Hollowbodies are a rock band from Toronto whose big hooks and sing-along choruses characterize their sophomore album 'When the Lights Go Out'. The follow up to the folky 'Town Without a Name' simultaneously brings more grit and polish than its predecessor. Following the release of their debut album in 2012, the band was a finalist in the CBC's Playlist for the Planet songwriting competition, were selected to play the emerging artist stage at the Boots and Hearts Music festival in 2012 and 2013, and played numerous shows and showcases in between.
